Get MONEY OFF your GGF Membership Subscription

Glass and Glazing Federation

The GGF 'Member Get Member' Reward Scheme

Introduce a company to the GGF and if they join then you'll receive money off your next year's subscription.

How it works

The GGF "Member Get Member Scheme" has been going since 2012 with a 10% credit offer off subscriptions. However, we're delighted to offer 20% of the first full year subscription of the new Member you introduce, off your 2019 subscription. This means that if you introduce enough companies or even one large company and the money off is equal to or more than your own subscription, then you could enjoy a free year's subscription and as it's uncapped it can be extended to further years' subscriptions!

So why don't you...

- Send us your introductions and if they join, get money off your next year's subscription!
- Invite potential new Members as guests to GGF meetings or GGF events
- Network with your industry colleagues and spread the word about the GGF

The money off credit will go to the Member who first submitted the details to us by email or via the online form.

Companies under 3 years old can join as Promotion Programme participants, rather than Members – the offer is still the same.

To qualify for money off under the 'Member Get Member' Scheme please send the details of the company you are introducing to our Membership Department by email to membership@ggf.org.uk, or fill in the form on our website via this link: <http://ggf.org.uk/members/member-get-member-scheme/form>

Welcome to GLASSi

The magazine exclusively for GGF Members

From the Top

Welcome to the winter edition of GLASSi.

2017 was a landmark year for all connected to the GGF as we celebrated our 40th Anniversary and made the necessary changes and appointments to ensure the Federation builds on its successful past.

In this issue of GLASSi, we review what has been a highly productive and memorable year. In our special six-page feature "A Year to Remember" we highlight the best of our activity and achievements across many areas including technical, political, health and safety, marketing and membership.

Our 40th Anniversary has been themed throughout with a unique Members' events programme, the historic timeline graphics installed in the GGF Building, awards for outstanding Members and branded souvenirs and publications with the special GGF anniversary logo to mark the special year.

The celebrations reached their peak in November, when Greg O'Donoghue received the GGF Lifetime Achievement Award at the G17 Awards.

Greg has been part of the Membership for almost 30 years and in that time has become one of the most influential Members in the Federation.

As GGF President and FENSA Chairman, Greg frequently engaged with Government. During his tenure, one of his greatest achievements was helping to set up FENSA which brought about legislative change for the domestic installation of windows and doors in England and Wales.

Many congratulations and thanks go to Greg for his remarkable contribution that has benefitted not just the GGF and FENSA but the entire industry.

As one door closes another opens and in 2018, an exciting chapter begins for the Federation.

On 2nd January, we welcome Shaun McAllister as the GGF's new Managing Director and I have no doubt his fresh approach combined with his solid management experience in the industry will take the GGF to an even higher level.

With unique events, recognition for outstanding Members, management and infrastructure changes all taking place during our 40th Anniversary, it has certainly has been a year to remember.

Have a great festive break and best wishes for 2018.

O'Donoghue

A Lifetime of Achievement

In November at the G17 Awards in London, Greg O'Donoghue received the GGF's Lifetime Achievement Award for his outstanding contribution to the glass and glazing industry.

Greg started installation company Just Windows and Doors Ltd in 1985 and has been Managing Director for 32 years. During this period he has also become one of the most influential individuals in the domestic glazing sector.

His list of significant achievements and longevity clearly highlight his perseverance, industry knowledge and commitment to improving the trading environment for companies large and small. In 2000, Greg was elected GGF President and then in 2002, as co-founder and Chairman of FENSA, he negotiated with Government to bring about legislative change for the benefit of the entire industry.

Since then Greg has been instrumental in progressing the industry in many areas including consumer protection, improving industry standards and overcoming barriers to glazing in conservation areas.

Always ready to offer advice and promote the industry, in this exclusive interview Greg reflects on his career achievements and looks ahead to unfinished business.

Firstly congratulations and thanks for your outstanding contribution to the GGF and the industry. How does it feel to have been recognised with the Lifetime Achievement Award in the GGF's 40th Anniversary year?

It was a genuine surprise. I wasn't expecting it at all but, now that it has sunk in, I feel really honoured.

Which achievement do you consider the most significant in your career?

I think the establishment of FENSA in 2002 has to be one of the most challenging but eventually most rewarding moments of my time in this industry. The timescale set by Government was almost impossible to meet and some of the hurdles, both financial and logistical, were daunting. I have to say that there were so many competing voices in relation to the expectations that it seemed we would never overcome some of the objections. However, it is a real testament to the people in this industry that many positions were compromised and tolerated to enable the whole thing to move forward. If it hadn't happened, it would have been a very expensive and disruptive time for all of us.

Where do you see the challenges ahead for companies in the domestic glazing sector?

At the moment, of course, we are all concerned about market shrinkage due to inflation and stagnant wage growth. It is obvious to all of us that we need to continue to make a strong case for the introduction of more incentives to homeowners to insulate their homes. And we all need to focus on innovation that is relevant to the homeowner. I feel we sometimes lag behind the more dynamic industrial sectors in getting the message across that we are not simply selling windows but a lifestyle product. So product diversification is vital. Maybe we could start with making old words redundant! Like "conservatories"! The various products being installed in the rear of homes these days deserve better.

What's next for you personally with regards to your career?

I have taken a bit of a back seat in my own company in recent months. Although I don't want to be involved heavily on a day-to-day basis, I will, if asked, continue to give advice, welcome or otherwise, to the new managers. I would also like to continue my support of the Glass and Glazing Federation. For all the challenges it has, and will continue to have, it has always managed to put the interests of its Members at the forefront of its activities. I'd like to help the GGF continue with that mission.

Steve Rice, Director of Technical Affairs

The GGF Technical team has had a busy year to date providing advice and support to Members regarding Building Regulations and ISO, European and British Standards for the manufacture, processing and installation of fenestration products.

In 2017, the GGF Technical team delivered the following technical services:

TECHNICAL ADVISORY SERVICE

On average, the Technical team receives more than 120 emails each month from a range of industry professionals, consumers, Members and local government officers. In addition, phone calls into the GGF Technical hotline are responded to within one to two working days and often we provide a same day service. The range of questions vary from what is an acceptable standard for glass and glazing through to the sorts of faults and features associated with glass and glazing products. We aim to provide a positive experience of the GGF for all enquiries and questions, regularly referring people to the search facility on our website so they can find Members or publications that can assist them. We always have two Technical officers available during office hours to try and answer questions or develop a line of enquiry for follow up.

STRUCTURAL CALCULATIONS

The Technical Department has invested in one of the most advanced pieces of software (MEPLA) for the calculation of structural loads on glass facades. This enables the Technical team to provide an advanced service to the Membership and the industry. To date, two GGF Technical officers have been fully trained on MEPLA and a further two will have completed their training by March 2018.

Consultancy Service

The Technical team provides a unique consultancy service to the Membership and the industry. This has proven itself to be a very popular service, generating additional revenue and raising the profile of GGF Technical expertise. To boost this service, two members of the Technical team have this year completed Expert Witness training qualifications.

GGF REPRESENTATION ON EXTERNAL BODIES

GGF Technical staff are also currently working with many external organisations such as the Construction Products Association (CPA), British Standards Index (BSI), Fire Safety Federation (FSF) and Centre for Windows and Cladding Technology (CWCT). The GGF presence on the technical committees for these organisations and more, ensures our Members' views are heard across the industry and their products are professionally represented.

CONCILIATION SERVICE

With the growth in Membership disputes, the Conciliation Department priority for 2017 was to streamline the way in which we resolve cases, make accessing the service more controlled and to promote what the department has to offer to both Members and consumers alike. This includes the time to resolve each case, which has been reduced by 21% since January 2016. The application process of the Conciliation Service will move online in 2018 to further enhance the resolution time.

Tech Talk

ENERGY SAVING CALCULATOR

Since its launch back in 2008, the GGF Energy Saving Calculator has gone from strength to strength. It is now one of the most popular pages on both the GGF website and MyGlazing.com. It has therefore been important to ensure that the calculations and information it delivers are both accurate and current. To achieve this the calculator is constantly monitored, keeping in line with new innovations such as triple glazing and A++ energy ratings. We are in regular communication with British Fenestration Rating Council (BFRC) who inform us of any updates to both available products and energy ratings.

STANDARDS

The Technical Department has produced a centralised list of British, European and International Standards entitled The Standards Report. This relates to the current position of all glass and glazing related standards, i.e. under review, published or out for public enquiry. This Members-only document, available in the Publications section of the GGF website, lets GGF Members quickly ascertain the current position of all glass and associated product standards.

SPECIALIST GROUP SUPPORT

The Technical team provided technical and secretarial support for all GGF specialist groups and regional meetings in 2017, and were instrumental in producing 15 new and/or revised technical data sheets and good practice guides including:

- + GGF Data Sheet 4.4 - Quality of Thermally Toughened Soda Lime Silicate Safety Glass for Building
- + Safety and Security Glazing: Good Practice Guide
- + Employee Safety in the Glass and Glazing Industry
- + Working at Height: Safely with Ladders
- + Deposit Indemnity Trust Fund Voucher
- + A Guide to the Planning Requirements and their effect on Replacement of Windows and Doors in England
- + Homeowners Guide to Planning
- + Guidance on Sharing Initial Type Test (ITT) - Conformity with EN 1279-5:2005+A2:2010
- + Insulating Glass Units (IGUs) - Conforming to the Construction Products Regulation (CPR)
- + Spontaneous Breakage of Thermally Toughened Glass
- + Laminated Glass – Safety and Security
- + Toughened Glass – Safety and Strength
- + Low Emissivity Glass (small revisions / address update)

It's been a busy year on the Technical front and we aim to continue to deliver our high quality range of technical services and publications in 2018 for the benefit of Members.

Health & Safety Matters

Mental Health – It's time to get serious

Phil Pinnington, GGF Director of Health and Safety, highlights some of the issues employers may face with regards to mental health and offers guidance on how to handle them.

A survey carried out in 2009 showed that at any given time, across England and Wales, one worker in six is said to be experiencing depression, anxiety or other stress-related problems.

I have worked across a number of different industries in my profession. Most have been male dominated and stress and mental health was seen as weakness. 'Can't cut it, or he's a weakling' were often phrases heard about workers who had been signed off by their doctors with stress.

Thankfully through a better understanding and the glare of publicity brought by members of the Royal Family and other notable figures it is acceptable to have this previously taboo subject discussed in the workplace.

Before we explore the landscape where stress and its effects exist we should consider what the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) definition of stress is. HSE defines stress as "the adverse reaction people have to excessive pressure or other types of demand placed on them".

We live in a 24-hour society where pressures are on us from all sides. Work, family, friends, peers etc. We are expected to share our lives with the world. How many 'Like's do we get on a Facebook comment? How many Twitter followers do we have? How many hours a week do I need to work to pay the bills? Have we got our children in the right school and are their friends the right ones that won't lead them into trouble? All are real pressures.

Why should it affect me as their employer?

I'm not advocating that employers should micro-manage their employee's lives. It's not healthy and I believe it is a step too far. We all need some level of stress to function, to get up in the morning and head to work requires incentive. What I do think is initially acknowledging it is an issue is a start and, that it has the potential to impact the performance of your employees with obvious consequences that affect your business.

Having employees who are regularly off work, or who continue to work with stress-related conditions, is not good for any business. High turnover of staff and worker burn out are both real and regular scenarios that employers across a range of industries experience.

For some years now, it has been a major concern in the glazing industry that the pool of labour may be decreasing. I believe it is in everyone's interest that this pool not be reduced further. Putting time and effort into the mental health of your employees is one way to invest in the future and sustainability of both your business and of the industry as a whole.

I recently had a very interesting conversation with one of our SME members. I was very impressed to hear that he was taking the issue of mental health seriously. Gone were the taboos and the fear of opening up a can of worms, they recognised that it was the right and sensible thing to do and had the courage to bring the issue out into the open with very positive results.

By providing a safe space and open culture for employees to discuss mental health they were clearer on how certain personal issues could impact on their employees' work.

Employers should be aware of what prescription or non-prescription medication their employees are taking, and the potential side effects. Relationship issues at work, a lack of leadership, and - more significantly - a perception that people lack control in their working lives can all play a part in employee mental health.

What are others doing?

The construction sector is one of the latest to recognise mental health as a factor affecting their industry. The Health in Construction Leadership Group, along with the British Safety Council, late last year launched the 'Mates in Mind' programme. This mirrored a similar scheme successfully launched in Australia some years ago.

The programme had three objectives:

- + Raising awareness about suicide in the workplace
- + Making it easy to access help
- + Ensuring that the help offered is practical, professional and appropriate

The programme has recruited some of the largest civil engineering companies and works with experts in the field of mental health, but they too recognise that SMEs are often the ones that need to recognise mental health as a risk and act on it.

Not every employer is able to set up a confidential Employee Assistance Programme (EAP) or employ experts in mental health, however there are other ways to address the matter. Training in Mental Health First Aid is now widely available, as is suicide awareness training. Often a colleague plays the part of confidante but doesn't know how to deal with what they've heard. By investing a relatively small amount in this your employees could reap real benefits.

Our industry does, in small part, recognise mental health as something that needs to be addressed. We as the GGF are willing to act as a conduit for Members who take the matter seriously and want to do something about looking after their employees' mental health.
